Those questions left unanswered required more information and understanding on my part before a simple yes or no could be checked off. When funding mechanisms - such as Act 60 - become so complex and onerous that they dilute the responsibility of its spending; you are left with an out-of-control system. This is the bed Vermont currently lies in with regards to education, as well as other areas of its fiscal spending. Linking spending and funding is imperative if Vermont is to efficiently and effectively spend its limited funds in a world of almost unlimited want. As far as the Revenue side of the ledger goes, Democratic Leadership Council founder and CEO Al From said it best: "Growing the economy and creating jobs remain the best ways to fight poverty, and neither is possible with a cocoon around our economy." The most compassionate action Vermont's government can take for its people is to promote a vibrant economy; this can be accomplished through responsible regulatory and tax reform. Vermont needs to declare that it will measure every action it takes, at every level of government, against its impact on jobs."
